

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

himself, or at that of the Earl of Argyll, his patron, or in some measure at that of the leading ministers in the Church at the time. Let that be as it may, Carswell executed the work, and did so in a highly creditable manner. The book has become so scarce that there is only one perfect copy of it known to exist. That copy is in the possession of the Duke of Argyll. There is one imperfect copy in the British Museum, which was originally found in the house of a farmer in Stratherrick, near Inverness, and another in the Library of the Edinburgh University. The value set upon the work by scholars may be seen from the following extract from a letter of the Rev. Dr. Reeves of Armagh to the Editor :—

‘ Having lately learned that of the only three known copies of the work but one is perfect, and that that one is in private possession, namely, in the Library of his Grace the Duke of Argyll, and subject to all the contingencies in the many degrees which occupy the space between the four cardinal points of mischief—fire, damp, worms, and thieves—my anxiety has become more intense, and I have resolved on appealing to you to take active steps for the perpetuation of this literary treasure. Here is a chapter in the History of Scotland, and much more, a mine of philological treasure in one important branch ' of the most interesting language in existence—

' combining all the charms of living excellence, and ' all the prestige of unfathomable antiquity, and
' this on the very verge of extinction—one life in ' a lease of incalculable value! Oh, do try and ' convert that terminable lease into one of lives
' renewable for ever.'

In the following Volume the Editor has endeavoured to accomplish the object thus described. He has given a transcript of the original Gaelic of Carswell's translation, page for page, and line for line. He has printed the language just as he found it, including the errors of the press. The English version of the Prayer-book, given along with the Gaelic, is taken from that in the Works of Knox, Edited by David Laing, Esq., LL.D. In some cases, however, the Editor was obliged to translate from the Gaelic. There is one Prayer of which he was unable to find the exact original in any copy of the Prayer-book which he has seen. He has been unable further to find any original for the Catechism of Carswell beyond the first few questions, which correspond with Calvin's. The mode of blessing a ship going to sea seems also to be original, while the graces before and after meals are so changed from the originals which the Editor has been able to discover, that he has preferred giving an English rendering of them. Some other fragments are also peculiar to Carswell's work. In one part, pp. 39-42, the English and the Gaelic division of the chapters do not correspond.

The Editor has to acknowledge his obligations to His Grace the Duke of Argyll for very essential aid in preparing this Volume; to the Senatus of the Edinburgh University, for the use of their copy of the Original, from which the transcript was chiefly made; and to David Laing, Esq., LL.D., for assistance in reproducing the English version of the Prayer-book.

NOTICES OF BISHOP CARSWELL.

IN the parish of Kilmartin, in Argyllshire, in a narrow, richly wooded Highland glen, and within a few miles of the south end of Loch Awe, lies the old castle of Carnassery. The castle appears to have been a stronghold of the family of Argyll, and had, as usual in such cases, its constable, who governed it in the name of the owner. In the early part of the sixteenth century this office was held by a family of the name of Carswell. Whence they had come does not appear, but the name is not a Celtic one, and the probability is that, like the Chisholms of the north, who came from Tweeddale, and became constables of the castle of Urquhart, the Carswells came from the Lowlands, and were appointed by the family of Argyll constables of Carnassery. John Carswell, the author of the following translation, appears to have been born about the year 1520. This is inferred from an entry in the record of the University of St. Andrews, to the effect that, in 1541, John Carswell, a native of Britain, was enrolled in the College of St. Salvator.<sup>1</sup> Allowing him to have been twenty-one years of age when so enrolled, which was by no means improbable at the period, the date of his birth would seem to have been as stated.<sup>1</sup>

The first notice of Carswell in public life is in connexion with what is called the rebellion of the Earl of Lennox, the father of Darnley. Lennox having been deceived by Cardinal Beaton, who found the Earl of Arran a more flexible man, and being deserted by the French King, made overtures of service to Henry the Eighth of England. Endeavouring to raise a rebellion against the Government, he was defeated near Glasgow, and obliged to fly to England. In this rebellion he was joined by the Islesmen, and among others by John Carswell, who followed him in his flight.<sup>2</sup> At what time or in what circumstances he returned we know not, but the event shows that from the beginning he was opposed to the policy of Cardinal Beaton.

We next find him Rector of his native parish of Kilmartin, and chaplain to the family of Argyll.<sup>3</sup> The holding of such offices would seem to indicate that he was in favour with the Argyll family, and further, that he must have been a man of more than ordinary acquire<sup>1</sup> Wodrow, quoting the records of St. Andrews University, says that in 1540 Carswell was incorporated in St. Salvator's College; that in the following year he took his degree of B.A.; and in 1544 that of M.A., on which occasion he is entered as 'Jho<sup>es</sup>. Carswell, Pauper.' This last term must, however, be understood as merely meaning that in the division of the students, usual at the time, into 'divites' and 'pauperes,' he was classed among the latter, or those who paid a less fee than the others, or were able to live less expensively, such being usually of the middle classes of society at the time.

ments. It is hardly possible to conceive that the Earl of Argyll would appoint, especially to the office of private chaplain, a man who was not of the same views on great public questions with himself, or who was not in point of intellect and acquirements likely to be a credit to the house. The Earl of Argyll of Carswell's day was Archibald the fifth Earl, of whom Douglas says, that 'He was the first of his quality who embraced the Protestant religion, of which he was a most zealous and sincere professor, and recommended the promotion thereof and the suppression of Popish superstitions to his son on his deathbed.' Carswell's testimony to his zeal for the Protestant faith, in his dedicatory epistle in this book, is very emphatic.

In addition to the above offices, Carswell was Chancellor of the Chapel Royal in Stirling.

In the early Scottish Reformed Church, the offices recognised as of Divine authority were the elder, the deacon, and the doctor, and the church was organized in accordance with this view. It became evident, however, at once that arrangements of a special kind were essential to meet the requirements of the country at the time. Ministers were few, and to a large extent confined to one section of the country, and it was impossible that in such circumstances ordained men could be appointed to conduct worship and administer ordinances in all the parishes of Scotland. It was this state of things that gave rise to the order of superintendents, which was instituted in 1560,—an order possessed of no distinct jurisdiction or separate ecclesiastical office, but consisting of ordinary ministers invested with authority to visit certain prescribed districts, and to see to the proper organization of the Church and the administration of Christian ordinances.

Five such superintendents were appointed in 1560, and among these was John Carswell, who had Argyll and the Isles assigned to him as his district. Such an appointment would not have been made in the case of a man destitute of the necessary qualifications. The other superintendents chosen were men of distinction in the Reformed Church, and it is not to be supposed that an exception would be made in the case of Carswell. He must have been known as a man of character and attainments ere the leading men of the period would have fixed upon him for so important an office. No doubt the number of ministers eligible for the office was small, the field of labour was wide and difficult, extending as it did to the Outer Hebrides, and the state of the people was such as to render it essential that the man who presided over the interests of the Church there should be a man of prudence, acquirements, and enterprise. Carswell makes reference to his duties in a letter written to Mr. Campbell of Kinzeancleuch, and dated off Dunoon, the 29th May 1564.<sup>1</sup> In that letter he says :—‘As for the continewance, as is besoир writtin, it ‘ sall be vsit, bot becaus I pas presentlie to Kytire, and ‘ thaireftir to the Ilis, to veseit sum kirkis, I can nocht ‘ be at the Generall Assemblie, and thinkis that my ‘ travell now in the Ilis may do mair gude to the Kirk ‘ nor my presens at the Assemblie ; becaus the Ilis can

'and ester my returning, I vald be glaid to commun

'mittis zow to the protection of God.'

In 1564, Carswell was appointed Titular Bishop of the Isles. It appears from the Register of the Privy Seal<sup>1</sup> that Mr. Patrick M'Lane having by the Queen's recommendation been elected Bishop of the Isles and Abbot of Icolmkill, but from the state of his health and other circumstances being unable to fulfil these offices, he resigned his right to Mr. John Carswell, in consideration of a yearly pension for his support; and on the 12th January 1564-5, Mr. John Carswell got from the Queen a grant for life of the whole revenue, lands, and possessions of the Bishopric of the Isles and Abbey of Icolmkill, on condition of his paying a yearly pension to Mr. Patrick M'Lane for his support, and also paying the stipends of the ministers planted within the Bishopric, and relieving the Queen thereof. This gave him a claim to the revenues of the ancient see. The amount of these was not great, for previous to his time they had been greatly dilapidated by his predecessors, and of the remnant that existed there was manifestly much difficulty in raising any part. In the letter to Mr. Campbell, already quoted, he says on this subject:—‘Bot in 'this mater of Teindis, it is nocht myne, bot the 'factouris. And zit gif George vald remember how

On the 24th March 1566, Carswell was formally presented by Queen Mary to the Bishopric of the Isles and to the Abbey of Icolmkill. The words of the presentation are as follows :—‘ Per presentes facimus, constituimus, et ‘ creamus dictum magistrum Joannem, episcopum dicti ‘ episcopatus insularum, et abbatem dictæ abbatiæ de ‘ Ycolumkill,—simili modo, et adeo libere in omnibus re-‘ spectibus, causis, et conditionibus, ac si dictus magister
‘ Joannes ad dictum episcopatum et abbaciam in curia

‘ the said diocese of the Isles, and Abbot of the said Abbey
‘ of Icolmkill,—in the same manner, and as freely in

'and Abbey in the Roman Court.' Keith remarks upon the presentation, that 'all this provision was, no doubt, made with a view that he might dilapidate the temporality to the family of Argyll.' This statement, however, is not consistent with a statement previously made by the writer himself; for, in his notice of John Campbell, whom he makes the predecessor<sup>1</sup> of Carswell, he states that 'He dilapidated most part of the benefice in favour of his relations; and some heritable jurisdictions he conveyed to his own family of Calder.' It seems very probable that Carswell has been mistaken for Campbell, and that charges have been made against him of which he was in a large measure innocent. The low state of the diocesan revenue seems to have been more his misfortune than his fault. At the same time, there is reason to believe that it was through Carswell the Argyll family became Commendators of the Abbey of Iona,—an office from which they derive some privileges to this day.

Carswell's acceptance of the Bishopric was offensive to the church of which he was a member and minister at the time. It is probably with reference to this that Mr. Campbell of Kinzeancleuch would seem to have

<sup>1</sup> According to the Register of the Privy Seal, M'Lane, as already noticed, was the immediate predecessor of Carswell, and this John Campbell was his successor; for it is recorded (B. xli. pp. 75, 104) that John Campbell, Preacher of the word of God and Prior of Ardchattan, was elected Bishop of the Isles in Carswell's room, and that he got, on the 12th January 1572-3, a precept approving his election and for installing him in the pastoral office. If Bishop Keith be right in saying that Campbell dilapidated the benefice to such an extent as he describes, it must have been done after the days of Carswell. The probability is, however, that the benefice came in a very dilapidated condition into Carswell's hands.

remonstrated with him, for Carswell, in his letter quoted above, feels himself constrained to make a defence. He says,—‘In your letter directit vnto me ‘(Beluiffit Brother in the Lord,) it apperis to me that ‘ze are sinisterlie informit towardis me, or ellis in ‘jugement and credit sum part facill. Becaus ze writt ‘as ane mening that ze think the warlid and induellaris ‘thairof turnand to(o) fast ; and indeid I feir the ‘samin to be maist trew in generall : God forbid it be ‘so in all speciallis. As for my awn part, concerning ‘fast turning in Goddis causis or the faythfullis, I hoip in ‘God, be assistance of his Spreit, to haue them dissauit ‘that so vald report of me (gif zour mening be thus).’

That the Church disapproved of his proceedings is manifest, for, in the General Assembly 1569, a formal complaint was made against him for assuming Episcopal dignity, when ‘Mr. John Kersewell, Superintendent of Argile, was rebooked for accepting the Bishopric of the Isles, without making the Assembly foreseen.’ He would also seem to have taken the side of Queen Mary in the civil dissensions that then prevailed, and was at the same time rebuked ‘for ryding at and assisting of the Parliament holden by the Queen after the murder of the King.’ In this Parliament (1567) there were the Primate and eight Bishops, one of whom was the Bishop of Sodor (the Isles).<sup>1</sup>

The cause of Carswell’s change is not very clear. In the above extract he denies its existence.

That the memory of Carswell is unpopular in Argyll-

shire is very true. But two causes existed for this. The first of these was that he set himself in opposition to the Bards and Seanachies or family historians of the country, as men whose influence was unfavourable to the progress of religion. St. Columba had done the same in his day, and had suffered in consequence. Carswell was satirized and lampooned by those leaders of public opinion, and they transmitted their feelings of animosity to later times by means of their compositions. The other cause was that he was a zealous reformer. With many at the time who clung to ancient religious beliefs and usages, this of itself would be a sufficient ground of offence, and there can be no doubt that this would to a large extent influence the popular belief, even after the questions which gave rise to the feeling had died away. Besides that, notwithstanding his own earnest disavowal of it, Carswell cannot be freed from the charge of inconsistency. Beginning as one of John Knox's Presbyterian Superintendents, and ending as one of Queen Mary's Bishops, is sufficient evidence of this. And the transition from what is public to what is personal, is usually so short, and so easy, that this shortcoming in a public matter might readily lead to charges of personal wrong-doing. And yet such charges against the personal character of Carswell seem to have little foundation in fact. If he was penurious, which is the chief accusation brought against him, it is hard to see how he could have been otherwise, for he had a miserable income, and he had a wide and expensive charge.

It is clear that Carswell had an earnest desire for the religious improvement of the people of the Highlands. No man of the time seems to have made similar exertions for their improvement. In 1565 the Geneva Prayer-book was first printed at Edinburgh, and in 1567 the Gaelic translation of that book was prepared by him, and passed through the press. It is remarkable to find that at so early a period provision for the wants of the Highlands should have so soon followed upon that made for the English-speaking portion of the kingdom. Nor is there reason to suppose that in this matter Carswell stood alone. The expense of the publication must have been considerable, and it is reasonable to suppose that he had the sympathy and support of the other Reformers, and that the cost of the undertaking was borne by friends of the cause elsewhere. That it was encouraged and aided by the then Earl of Argyll, is a very natural supposition. Besides the translation of the Prayer-book, Carswell seems to have executed a translation into Gaelic of Calvin's Catechism. This was not published for nearly sixty years after his death, but there is internal evidence to show that the work was Carswell's, and that it had lain by in ms. during that long period.

The work which is now reprinted is one which is highly creditable to Carswell's scholarship, as well as to his zeal. That it was executed by himself he states decidedly, while he apologises for what he holds to be great and manifold defects in the execution. Besides defects in the translation, he tells us that there was no proper correcting of the press, from the ignorance of the printer of the Gaelic language, and yet the work is executed with an accuracy and propriety altogether remarkable for the time. The language is the ancient dialect employed by literary men, in both Scotland and Ireland, which some writers designate Irish, but which was equally cultivated by the Scottish Celt. The book is the first existing specimen of the Gaelic language printed in either Scotland or Ireland.

Carswell had considerable poetical gifts. In this volume there are some lines apparently composed by himself, and in addition to this, there is a hymn, given in a collection of Hymns, by D. Kennedy, Kilmelfort, published in 1786, and republished in 1836, which is attributed to him. This composition is usually called Carswell's advice to his son. As the work in which it appears is scarce, the hymn is here reproduced, as affording an opportunity of comparing the language of the same author in 1567, and as it appears in 1786.

HYMN.

BY BISHOP CARSWELL.

ON the day in which I am merry, happy,
Thou my son of bluest eye ;
One word about the good of the soul
Is of more bitter taste than the fresh cut alder.

John, who livest in this town above,
It is sad that thou understandest not death ;
Seest thou not the man of pride below,
With the green grass growing through him.

Though thou esteemest thy herd of swine,
Thy fold of cows, spotted, speckled ;
So much as an apple, however little,
Shall not go with thee to the narrow grave.

Miserable man, wilt thou not fear,
Seest thou death hastening towards thee ?
Thou art just as if on the brink of the grave,
Even although thou shouldst live longest of any.

When the pillow is taken away from thee,
And thine eyes have been closed ;
They shall place thee stretched upon wood,
And not upon a bed of down.

They shall put thee in a narrow chest,
One fold of linen around thy body ;
The roof of thy house close to thy nostril,
A narrow dwelling place it is.

Three yards of linen from the market
Shall go round thy body, little is its value ;
And thy friends and companions shall be Cutting it at the soles of thy feet.

They shall raise thee the next day,
Then alternately bearing thy body ;
Young man, though great is thy mirth,
The game of the grave shall be played with thee.

A little bier which thou wouldest not like,
They shall take with thee to the mouth of the pit ;
The hand that was kindest to thee once,
Shall now shovel earth rapidly on thee.

They shall carry thee to the mouth of the grave
Without strength, without sight, without power ;
Thy friends following thee in grief,
And thou shalt be left there alone.

Miserable man, wilt thou not fear,
Seest thou death hastening towards thee ?
Thou art just as if on the brink of the grave,
Even although thou shouldst live longest of any.

There are numerous traditions throughout the West Highlands respecting Carswell, and these have in some cases taken the shape of popular rhymes. One has reference to his height, which is said to have been uncommon. The following are the lines :—

An Carsalach mòr tha'n Carnasaraidh,
Tha na cuig cairt 'n a chasan ;
Tha 'dhroll mar dhruinnein na corra,
'S a sgròban lom, gionach, farsaing.

In English—

The great Carswell of Carnassery,
There are five quarters (45 inches) in his legs ;
His rump is like the back of a crane,
His stomach empty, greedy, capacious.

Other fragments of a similar kind exist, but it is not necessary to give them. They represent a feeling which existed in a certain portion of the community, but they do not represent the real truth respecting Carswell.

Bishop Carswell died in July or August 1572.<sup>1</sup> He was alive on the 21st June 1572,<sup>2</sup> and was dead before the 4th September 1572, when a presentation was given to the Chancery of the Chapel Royal, vacant by his death,<sup>3</sup> and on the 20th September, a license was granted to elect a Bishop of the Isles in his room.<sup>4</sup>

"There is a tradition that he ordered his remains to be deposited in the Priory of Ardchattan, about forty miles distant from Carnassery. The day of his interment was marked by a violent storm, which occasioned much distress to the great concourse of people who attended the funeral, carrying the bier on their shoulders, according to the custom of the times; so that to this day, when there is a tempest of more than ordinary violence, there is a common saying among the people, 'There has not been the like since Carswell's funeral day.'"<sup>5</sup>

These notices of Bishop Carswell are short and imperfect; but little has come down to us through the three hundred years that have intervened since his death. The times in which he lived were troublesome, and were followed by times not less so, and much of what may have been transmitted from his own time must have perished.

It is an excellent, honourable custom which is now and ever was followed, by men who practised to labour or work, in order to make that labour to become profitable for the people and for the nations, and for the race and generation after them, to dedicate the fruit of their labour to the nobles or to the friends or to the companions who agreed with their work, and who were most worthy and who were most entitled to the love of him who did the work. I now, most worthy nobleman and excellent Lord, following this practice so far as in my power, and understanding how well this subject agrees with your heavenly mind, and how entirely you have deserved a testimony and an expression of love much merited from me, and on that account I saw that it would be proper for me to make over and to dedicate to you this little work of mine, which is the first fruit of my mind, my Lord, for your religious life has proved to us from the time of your childhood that this religious work is agreeable to you. And further, the weight of the burden you have borne in contending against those who would seek to destroy the holy gospel has proved how worthy you are that this should not be forgotten; and that your excellent name should not be lost sight of to the end of the world. And although the enemies of the truth say without shame that princes and nobles of this world have no concern with the gospel of God, nor with the uprooting of a false faith; you have understood better than that the words of the holy prophet David, who instructs the princes of the earth to know and not to be ignorant of the divine law.

It was thus that the holy patriarchs (before the law was written) obtained long life, and many other good gifts: so as that they themselves might know the will of God, and also that they might teach this will of God to their children and to their race after them. And although some difference was made between the office of Moses and the office of Aaron when the written law was given to the children of Israel : nevertheless we learn from their brotherhood, and from the care which Moses took of it, that he not only cared for the worldly things, but that he concerned himself more about the divine law being kept purely among the people than about worldly matters.

And this appears clearly in the rebuke which he gave to Aaron and to the whole people, when he saw the honour they gave to the golden calf which they made against the will of God, at the time when he broke the two tables on which were written the ten commandments by the finger of the Almighty God, and Moses inflicted very sore punishment on them on that account. The judges and believing kings of Israel understood that which we now say, such as Gideon, and Samuel, and David, and Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah (Uzziah), and Josiah : and also some of the wicked judges and of the kings who obtained disgrace and condemnation in the testimony of God from the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. The cause of their being thus under censure and condemnation from God was that they did not understand that it was their duty to care for the Divine law, nor that they were bound so to do, or if they did understand it, that they neglected the care they ought to take on so understanding it. If we seek to know the history of the Gentile nations, we shall find there that the same cause led them to give the obedience and the honour due from them to God to false gods, viz., ignorance and carelessness concerning the Divine law, and the will of God, on the part of princes, and that although straying from and ignorant of the Divine law, they had respect and great honour to give to the dumb and deaf gods in whom they believed, and to the philosophers and wise men whom they possessed ; so that they were wont to ask counsel of their gods in the time of distress and of necessity, and were wont to spend liberally on their images and on their lying altars. And this was shown in the city of Athens, which was a school of wisdom generally among the heathen nations throughout, where every man commonly took an oath, in these words, Pugnabo pro templis et sacrī solus et cum alijs.—viz. I shall fight for the temples and the sacred things alone and along with others. Wherefore it is clear to us that the heathen people had care and respect for, and faith in, their false gods and their temples. According to this, those men who desire Christian lords and princes to have no care for the Divine law are the enemies of the human race.

It is in this revelation of Jesus that we have all we need to teach us. We have in it the law which, as a looking-glass, shows us our own evil, and our condemnation, if God were pleased to judge us according to our sin. His great mercy and his great grace are pressing the forgiveness of sin on every penitent man, for God prefers the penitence of the sinner to his death. And there is included in it the inheritance of the heaven of God, promised to every one who receives Christ our Lord to him in good faith.

If so, you know well, my Lord, how this testimony of Christ has been suppressed, and drowned, and polluted; how the law has been destroyed by the oppression of the Pope and the other false apostles who have deceived the world altogether in this time, through great ignorance. For it is not in vain that you have laboured from your youth reading the holy Scriptures, for you have preferred that which the Divine gospel has shown to you to the greatness of the ancient fame, and the old customs which you have heard were followed by your honourable ancestors who preceded you, speaking of the holy king Hezekiah (Josiah ?), who was a youth when he obtained the kingdom. What he did was to take the holy book into his hand, viz., the testimony in which is the will of God, and to make it known to the people, and to make the prophets and the priests through the grace of God to make it known to the children of Israel, and to expel by its means the corrupt law which the covetous priests gave in place of the law of God, in order to establish and increase their own worldly power, through vain ignorance by the counsel of Satan, viz., the evil spirit who is the enemy of the kingdom of Christ, without looking to the evil that might follow on that account. Moses did not consider the danger when he undertook at God's command to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt,

Gideon did not consider the fewness of his men when he attacked the heathen with his three hundred, and when the number of those against him could not be counted for greatness. David, and he a youth coming from herding his flocks, did not consider the littleness of his body, nor his youth, nor his want of skill in the exercises of war, and dexterity in arms, so as to refuse to fight Goliah, a great, cruel, and fierce giant, immense in body, mature in age, and knowing, skilful in fights and conflicts, nevertheless they succeeded in those enterprises and works which they undertook by direction of the Holy Spirit, and by the command of God Almighty. Moses in leading the people through the sea, and in feeding them in the desert for forty years with the manna, viz., with that food which was brought from heaven after the king and all the Egyptians were drowned. It prospered with Gideon when he broke in on his enemies and on his foes, and though his numbers were few when we see the numbers against him. It prospered with David, and he quite a young man, so as that he killed the old Goliath, strong and vigorous, with the shot of a stone from his sling.

It has prospered with you, my Lord, in telling of the noble kings spoken of above, in every work and great enterprise you have undertaken, through the grace of the Holy Spirit, and knowledge of the Holy Scripture, without looking to your danger or peril, or to any trouble you might endure, viz., in destroying the false faith and false worship, and in burning images, and putting down evil example, and in breaking down and levelling altars and

And this want of shame has appeared in some of them that they have vowed against hearing the gospel of God, and say that the Holy Bible is untrue, as the Jews said of Christ our Lord, Seductor populi dæmonium habens, viz., A deceiver of the people having a devil ; and as the children of Israel often said to Moses and to the other prophets that they were deceiving the people, because that they were showing the commandments and will of God, and because that they required of them to forsake their false gods and their lying images. because it is opposed, and because of the hatred of wicked men. For that cause we desire now to begin that which we never heard was done before, such as to translate into Gaelic the forms and summary of prayers, and the administration of the sacraments ; for we have taken this much courage to ourselves to endeavour to do this, in the words of Christ, for the comforting of the Christian Church ; but though our Gaelic is not very good, yet my good intentions may be taken in room of what I want, and I confess that I have a great want, in my knowledge of the Gaelic language and in my power of writing it, and for that reason I promise to submit to any man of more knowledge than myself. But, moreover, I know well that it is not in the sweet words of the learned the truth of the Holy Scriptures is clothed, and that there is no need of giving it the fine polished lying colour of the poets. For the truth is a sufficient witness for itself, not requiring any other covering ; but although the lie of this world requires some other remarkable colour to be given it as a cover from without, inasmuch as it is corrupt within ; and to whomsoever God gave knowledge to write the language and to compose well, and to speak in Gaelic, so much the greater is his obligation to use this gift given him of God to defend and to build up the truth which is in the gospel of God, rather than to use it for defending a lie, or wickedness, or departing from that gospel. The principal reason which moved me to undertake this work was, viz., the love of God first, and fear lest he might demand of me the talent, viz., to abuse the gift he had bestowed on me, and love to the Church of God, and to help the Christian brethren who have need of teaching and of comfort, and who have no books ; and along with these reasons I was much moved by my hope in your firmness and consistency in the divine way which you chose from your youth and from the days of your im-

And we say to you, my Lord, not to consider the littleness of the gift or of him that gives it, but the excellence of the way and of the cause, and the love and sincere obedience to you of him who makes the gift. For if I were of equal wisdom, and knowledge, and understanding with authors and with wise men, it is to you, my Lord, that I would give the first-fruit of my understanding and mind, for Christ took the two mites which the widow

For the beginning of a thing to which we are unaccustomed is difficult, but once it is begun it is half-finished. May the Almighty God, for the love of his dear Son Jesus Christ, keep and comfort your mind and your heart by his powerful Holy Spirit, that you may do his divine will which is revealed to you in his holy law ; may he pour of his grace and his marvellous light with abounding favour on your people, and on your country, and on your men, and on your tenantry, and especially on your ministers over your whole possessions. To the most excellent Trinity of three persons, viz., to the great, marvellous Father, and to the fair, great, and powerful Son, and to the Holy most adorable Spirit, it becomes all honour and glory and thanks to be given, for ever and ever.

Unto every Christian throughout the whole earth, and specially to the men of Alban (Scotland) and of Eireand (Ireland), to such of them as desire to receive the faithful words of God in their hearts and minds, John Carswell sends his blessing, and prays for the Holy Spirit for them from God the Father, through how short a time it can be done, however much there may be of it. And great is the blindness and darkness of sin and ignorance and of understanding among composers and writers and supporters of the Gaelic, in that they prefer and practise the framing of vain, hurtful, lying, earthly stories about the Tuath de Dhanond, and about the sons of Milesius, and about the heroes and Fionn Mac Cumhail with his giants, and about many others whom I shall not number or tell of here in detail, in order to maintain and advance these, with a view to obtaining for themselves passing worldly gain, rather than to write and to compose and to support the faithful words of God and the perfect way of truth. listen to the truth when offered them for nothing. Besides a large amount of the want of knowledge and the ignorance of those of whom I have already spoken arise from a want of faithful teaching among us, and of a good book which men could understand generally in their own tongue and in their own native Gaelic language.

But God Almighty and King of all things and of archangels has opened up an excellent path and way and doors for us now, proclaiming to us that we are free to peruse the Holy Scriptures, and to judge of them and declare them to the people. And besides that, the forms and substance of the prayers and administration of the scaraments, and the Confession of the Christian faith, are put in order for us by the Christian brethren who are in the city called Geneva. But there is this, if I saw any man of the Gael of Alban and of Eireand, that should undertake, in aid of the Church of God, to translate this little book into the Gaelic language in which men could understand it, it would be very grateful to me. And I myself would not undertake this work. But since none such has been found, or if there be such I do not know him, who will undertake it out of love to God and to the Church, with more ability than my means and my power can bring to it. I hope that God will aid me in my defects and my ignorance.

But indeed I believe that there is nothing wanting here more than as it is printed in Latin and in English, unless some want or defect appear in the Gaelic as it is written accurately by the poets. This is a matter which the Holy Scriptures do not require, and indeed they are very few who know the Gaelic correctly either in Alban or in Eireand, unless it be a few learned men skilled in poetry and history, and some good scholars; and hence if any learned men find any fault in the writing or composing of this little book, let them excuse me, for I never acquired any knowledge of the Gaelic except as any one of the people generally. But the ignorant and the rude will find faults in things that are not faulty, and they will allow error to pass without discerning the error that is in it. And it is not in what is right that the fault lies of which they speak, but in themselves, and on that account I shall not be troubled by these, though they be numerous, nor shall I contend with ignorance according to my own will or desire, neither shall I despise or speak ill of any man nor shall I cherish jealousy and envy if he does better than I have had it in my power to do ; for I acknowledge that that is quite possible, but at the same time if it be the will of God composed by Mr. John Carswell to this little book itself.

¶ A LITTLE HYMN HERE

Move onwards, little book,
To O'Duibhne reach in order.
So soon as thou leavest the press,
Prosper then in his dwelling.
After that travel each land
Throughout Alban gently, slowly.
But, as there is no need for thee there,
Do not make one step into the land of the Saxon.
After that, travel over each wave
To the border of Erin, the liberal land.

Though the brethren care little for thee,
Move as the eye directs thee west.
Every teacher without wise teaching,
Every poet who hates not a lie,
A distance between thee and these,
Little book, let there be unto death.
To every one who loves the right
Of the race of Adam, let no danger be,
With those make thou thy nest,
Little book, then move onwards.

So the Supper declareth, that God, as a most provident Father, doth not onely fede our bodies, but also spiritually nourisheth our soules with the graces and benefites of Jesus Christ (which the Scripture calleth eatinge of his flesh and drinkinge of his bloode) ; nether must we, in the administration of these sacraments, followe man's phantasie, but as Christ him self hath ordeyned so must they be ministred, and by suche as by ordinarie vocation are therunto called. Therfor, whosoever reserveth and worshippeth these sacraments, or contrariwyse contemneth them in tyme and place, procureth to him self damnation.

Of their Office and Deutie.

Because the charge of the Word of God is of greater importaunce then that any man is able to dispense therwith ; and Saincte Paule exhorteth to esteme them as ministers of Christe, and disposers of God's mysteries ; not lordes or rulers, as S. Peter saith, over the flocke. Therfore the pastor's or minister's chief office standeth in preaching the Word of God, and ministring the sacraments. So that in consultations, judgementes, elections, and other politcall affaers, his counsel, rather then autoritie, taketh place.

And if so be the Congregation, uppon juste cawse, agreeeth to excommunicate, then it belongeth to the minister, according to their general determination, to pronounce the sentence, to the end that all things may be done orderly, and withoute confusion.

A CONFESSION OF SINNES, AND PETITIONS, MADE UNTO GOD IN THE TYME OF OUR EXTREAME TROUBLES, AND YET COMMONLY USED IN THE CHURCHES OF SCOTLAND, BEFORE THE SERMON.

Eternal and everlasting God, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, thou that shovest mercy, and kepest covenant with them that love and in reverence kepe thy commandements, even when thou powrest foorth thy hote displeasure and just judgments upon the obstinat inobedient; we here prostrat our selves before the throne of thy Majestie, from our hearts confessing, that justelie thou hast punished us by the tyrannie of strangers, and that more justelie thou mayest bring upon us againe the bondage and yoak which of thy mercy for a season thou hast removed. Our kings, by cause the justice of Jesus Christ is made ours by baptism. Not that we thinke any suche vertue or power to be included in the visible water or outward action, (for many have bene baptised, and yet never inwardly purged,) but that our Saviour Christ, who commanded baptism to be ministred, will, by the power of his Holy Spirite, effectually worke in the harts of his elect (in tyme convenient) all that is ment and sygnified by the same. And this the Scripture calleth our regeneration, which standeth chieflie in these two points, in mortification, that is to say, a resisting of the rebellious lustes of the fleshe, and in newnes of lyffe, wherby we

The third shal expresse to us our faith in the Holy Ghost. And the fourth and last, shal declare what is our faith concerning the Church, and of the graces of God freely given to the same.

First, of God we confesse three things, to wit, that he is our Father, Almighty, maker of heaven and earth. Our Father we call him, and so by faith beleve him to be, not so muche, because he hath created us (for that we have common with the rest of creatures, who yet are not called to that honour to have God to them a favourable Father;) but we call him Father, by reason of his free adoption, by the which he hath chosen us to lyf everlasting in Jesus Christ.

A Priest, and that perpetual and everlasting, we confesse him, by reason that by the sacrifice of his own body, which he once offered up upon the crosse, he hath fullie satisfied the justice of his Father in our behalf: so that whosoever seketh any meanes besides his death and passion, in heaven or in earth, to reconcile unto them God's favour, they do not onely blaspheme, but also, so farre as in them is, renounce the fruit and efficacie of that his onely one sacrifice. We confesse him to be the onely Prophet, who hath reveiled unto us, the whole will of his Father in all things perteining to our salvation.

This our Lord Jesus we confesse to be the onlie Sonne of God, because there is none such by nature but he alone. We confesse him also our Lord, not only by reason we are his creatures, but chiefly because he hath redeemed us by his precious blood, and so hath gotten just dominion over us, as over the people whom he hath delivered from bondage of sinne, death, hel, and the devil, and hath made us Kings and Priests to God his Father.

We farther confesse and beleve, that the same our Lord Jesus was accused before an earthly judge, Pontius Pilate, under whome albeit oft and divers times he was pronounced to be innocent, he suffered the death of the crosse, hanged upon a tree betwixt two theves. Which death, as it was most cruel and vile before the eyes of men, so was it accursed by the mouth of God himselfe, saying, ‘Cursed is everie one that hangeth on a tree.’
And this kynde of death susteined he in our person, because he was appointed of God his Father to be our pledge, and he that shuld beare the punishment of our transgressions.

And so we acknowledge and beleve that he hath taken away that curse and malediction that hanged on us by reason of sinne. He verely died, rendring up his spirit into the hands of his Father, after that he had said, ‘Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit.’ After his death, we confesse his body was buryed, and that he descended to the hel. But because he was the Author of life, yea, the very lyfe itself, it was impossible that he shulde be retained under the dolors of death ; and therefore the third day he rose agayn victor and conqueror of death and hel ; by the which his resurrection, he hath brought life agayne into the world, which he, by the power of his Holie Spirit, communicateth unto his lyvely membres ; so that now unto them corporal death is no death, but an entrance into that blessed life, he had sufficiently prooven his resurrection to his disciples, and unto suche as constantly did abide with him to the death, he visible ascended to the heavens, and was taken from the eyes of men, and placed at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, where presently he remaneth in his glory, onely Head, onely Mediator, and onely Advocate for all the members of his body: of which we have most especial comfort. First for that by his ascension the heavens are opened unto us, and an entrance made unto us, that boldly we may appeare before the throne of our Father's mercie.

And, secondarilye, that we know that this honor and authoritie is given unto Jesus Christ, our head, in our name, and for our profite and utiltie. For albeit that in body he now be in the heaven, yet by the power of his Spirit he is present here with us, of our Saviour Christ, let us consider these woordes of S. Paule, how he exhorteth all persons diligently to trye and examine them selves before they presume to eate of that bread and drinke of that cuppe. For as the benefite ys great, if with a truly penitent hart

OF MARIAGE.

The Exhortation.

DEARLIE beloved Bretherne, we are here gathered together in the sight of God, and in the face of his Congregation, to knytt and joyne these parties together in the honorable estate of Matrimony, which was instituted and auctorised by God hym selff in Paradise, man beyng then in the state of innocencie. For what tyme God made heaven and earth, and all that is in theym, and had created and fasshoned man also after his owne similitude and likenes, unto whome he gave rule and lordship over all the beastes of the earth, fissches of the sea, and fowles of the ayre; he said, It is not good that man lyve alone; let us make hym an helper like unto hym selff.

- D. It is in this way that I understand them, viz. that Christ commanded his disciples and their successors to urge his mercy and his love on every man, and to preach to them in his name that to as many as repented, their sins were forgiven. And that to such as refused to repent, their sins would continue without forgiveness, and that God would punish them.

- D. The word minister answers the question, for it is equivalent to saying, one who administers or dispenses, which is their share of the work, administering the word of God's Gospel, and dispensing the Sacraments, according to God's holy revelation, for to himself alone belongs the forgiveness of sins, with the inworking of his Holy Spirit, and he never communicated this power to prophet or to disciple, or to any other man, save to Jesus Christ alone.
- M. What then is the sum of thy faith?
- D. That God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ (and the Father of us all) is the beginning and principal cause of all things, and that he governs, and that nothing is done without his appointment and his providence.

Farther, that the Holy Ghost is true God because that he is the substance, the strength, and the power of God, and that it is he that impresses on our hearts the promises made to us in Jesus Christ. And finally that the church is sanctified and delivered from her sins by the mercy of God, and that she shall rise after this life to life eternal.

D. I call the seventh day, the day which was called Saturday by the children of Israel, and it is the day called the Lord's day among us Christians.
M. What made this change of the day ?
D. The change of the sacrifice, for as Jesus Christ gave his own flesh and blood as a true sacrifice in place of the sacrifices which were typical or figurative, so the true Sabbath is given us, as our everlasting rest, through the offering of that sacrifice, and it is in proof of that the day has been changed, as we have said.

in the twenty second chapter of the Gospel of Luke, and in the eleventh chapter of the first epistle of Paul to the Corinthians.

- M. Is not that the mode that was usual in the mass ?
- D. No indeed, for they are directly opposed to each other, the mode of administering this Sacrament according to Christ, and the evangelists, and the apostles, and the mode followed in the Popish mass.
- M. How then should this Sacrament be administered ?
- D. With bread and wine as ordered in the chapters we have mentioned already.
- M. Are this bread and this wine just like any other bread and wine ?
- D. No, for after they are blessed they are holy bread and holy wine, but the substance of the bread and of the wine is not changed, yet they are called the body of Christ and the blood of Christ truly, for it is the nature of Sacraments that the names of the things of which they are Sacraments should be given to them.

- M. Are not the flesh and the blood of Christ present as the virgin bore him, and as he was crucified in the body.
- D. No, for his body is at the right hand of the Father in heaven, as the article of our faith teaches us, although he is spiritually with his power, present in that holy Sacrament.
- M. What farther efficacy is there in our use of the Sacraments ?
- D. There is much indeed, for when we use the Sacrament aright, in the manner which Jesus our Lord commands, we eat and drink the body and the blood of Christ spiritually, and our souls are nourished by the body and the blood of Jesus Christ unto everlasting life, and it is not in this holy bread that we should seek our salvation but in heaven by raising up our minds to

THE PATER IN METRE.

Our Father which art in heaven
Since it is my delight to entreat thee
Such being my life and my health
Blessed O King be thy name,
In it is happiness and peace,
Without misery or want for ever,
Let thy kingdom and government come
Let thy right be extended over others.
Let thy will be done by us
On earth by every creature thou hast made
As is done by the angels who are spirits
Above in the heaven of God in truth.
Life for the soul and the body
Since so it is that thou are merciful to us,
Our daily bread each day
Give us without stint or delay
Those debts which we owe to thee
Forgive us, without exacting them always,
Forgive to us all our sins.

A LAWFUL APOLOGY.

I know well that ingenious, careless men will ridicule and laugh at, and mock this little work because that the language wants the polish of the poets, and because the words want force; and if there be a defect in the words used, or in the mode of writing them, or if one letter be substituted for another in this book, this is not to be wondered at, as the printer had not one word of Gaelic, but printed by chance or by guess. And I know full well that the Papists, and especially the old abusive priests will vomit scandal against myself, and that my reward from them for my work will be defamation and reproach, but I am not the worse of that, and I say as Paul said, that if I do the will of men I am not a faithful servant to Christ, and farther the truth does not suffer by the reproaches of the wicked, and as it is my purpose to aid plain Christians who receive my good will with pleasure, and who will not reproach me with my defects, so also on the other hand, it is far from my wish to provoke abuse from Papists in always speaking and always writing the truth and in always pointing out their errors so long as I live ; for neither prophet, nor apostle, nor even the Son of God himself escaped abuse from the priests, and from the enemies of the truth, yet they overcame by patience, through the power of God. Woe to them with whom the world is prosperous, Woe to them who obtain its favour,

If our tie be to the world,
There is danger that the will of God is not done.

The sorrow of this tree has placed
A protecting hoop round the blood of Eve.

This little book was finished by the Bishop of the Isles on the 24th day of the month of Aprile in the fifteen hundred and sixty seventh year of the annals of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the twenty fifth year of the reign of the most powerful Queen Marie, Queen of Alban.

The Grace of God in its beginning we are,
